Course Title: Field Work and Report Writing

At present, almost the entire sociology curriculum is classroom centered. Since society is the wider laboratory in which sociological knowledge is produced and refined, it is necessary to enliven the teaching of sociology by making it oriented to existential and social reality. This can be done, wherever possible, by incorporating field-based learning and project work. Apart from field trips to institutions and events, the students should be made to prepare reports focusing on social reality. This course introduces the student to the field from a sociological perspective. Exposure to the fieldwork at the post-graduate level is intended to enhance the research interests and inculcate the spirit of inquiry among students who may be motivated to continue higher studies in research. The students have to learn the techniques of construction of research tools for undertaking field studies while constructing the questionnaires, interview schedules and various other tools depending upon the nature of the research. Subsequently they have to undergo field work and analysis of data in form of a project report. In addition, she/he must submit field observation notes, interview transcripts and any other data as appendices.
